Reaching a Common Goal by Collaborating

*American Numismatic Association and American Philatelic Society offer
Special Publications, Membership Discount*

As the saying goes, "two is better than one." That's why the American Numismatic Association (ANA) and the American Philatelic Society (APS) have teamed up to deliver a coin and stamp edition of The Numismatist and The American Philatelist.

Each publication's November issue features articles and columns that have cross-over appeal to both hobby groups, including a joint cover story on the joys of collecting coins and stamps written by numismatic legend Ken Bressett and Dr. Paul M. Holland's article about Latvian stamps printed on bank notes. "Our hobbies could be siblings," said ANA Editor-in-Chief Caleb Noel, "and readers will see the 'family resemblance' in our numismatic articles that have a philatelic twist. It was a joy working with APS Editor-in-Chief Susanna Mills and her team. I hope our content will inspire readers to delve into a new collecting interest."

Through this collaboration, the two nonprofit hobby organizations – each with approximately 27,000 members – show coin and stamp collectors how to combine interests in postage stamps, coins, postal stationary, paper money, tokens, postal history, medals, and other specialized areas. "Our two industries complement each other remarkably," said ANA President Tom Uram. "What binds philatelists and numismatists together? Both actively collect through research and assemble collections based on various themes and topics. But at the end of the day, we share a love of history, enjoy learning, and cherish the friends and experiences that collecting coins and stamps affords us."

The full November issue of The American Philatelist is available to ANA members at bit.ly/aps-philatelist. APS members can access the November issue of The Numismatist at bit.ly/ana-numismatist.
